The Department of Economics
Want to contribute to the debate on some of the most pressing social and political issues facing humanity? Study economics. Get involved in research. Make a difference.

Understand the complexity.

Your mission: think clearly and critically about the world using the economics paradigm and equip yourself with the economic and analytical tools needed to shape public policy.

- Economics major (financial economics concentration available)
- International economics major
- Business economics minor

What happened in 1929? What happened in 2008? Will it happen again? Economists study where we've been and where we're going.