PLS major

J.D. candidate, Northwestern University School of Law

"PLS is a hotbed of intellectual engagement among undergraduates on campus. The students in the program get to engage with the great questions, the Great Books, and have stimulating conversations every day in class and outside of class as well. It's a real community.

"By the end of it, we're all prepared for just about anything that involves reading or writing. You're challenged every day.

"A PLS major approaches complexity with humility and with respect, but also with the guidance of the wisest men and women, the best writers of all previous generations."

Curriculum requirements

6 four-credit Great Books seminars

13 three-credit tutorials in methods of a specific disciplines (philosophy, literature, science, fine arts, political theory, intellectual and cultural history)

Senior thesis

1 to 2 electives per semester
